

Promotion, Prevention & Early Intervention (PPEI) Mapping Tasmania

Report for: Mental Health and Alcohol and Drug Directorate (MHADD)

Prevention Mapping

DEN has conducted a mapping exercise to identify ATOD prevention (and related) initiatives and services offered across Tasmania. The mapping extends beyond the ATOD sector where those services are known or where information is easily accessed to cover PPEI initiatives across the spectrum of community services, local government and social and sport organisations which support community members at risk of harmful use of substances. The mapping exercise took place between Jan 2020 and August 2020.

Activities are classified as primary, secondary and tertiary as defined below.

Primary prevention / Health promotion:

Whole of population/community activities that seek to prevent people developing an ATOD-related problem. Examples include laws and regulations that govern the availability, accessibility and sale of substances, e.g. price and access to alcohol and tobacco, restrictions on advertising and marketing; information on the risks and harms associated with ATOD use (both whole of population e.g. NHMRC alcohol guidelines and target groups, e.g. drinking in pregnancy, Good Sports program); addressing the social determinants of health (reducing risk factors and enhancing protective factors); government policy, e.g. cigarette plain packaging

Secondary prevention/some early intervention:

Activities targeted toward 'at risk' populations or communities, and people who are identified as having an emerging ATOD use issue. Also includes reducing risk factors and enhancing protective factors (also part of primary prevention/health promotion). Examples include NSP; programs for 'problem' drivers; counselling for ATOD-use at risk levels; diversion programs; smoking cessation; sobering up services.

Tertiary prevention/early intervention:

Activities for people with a diagnosis of substance use or dependence. Includes the range of ATOD sector treatment services including detoxification, residential rehabilitation, opioid pharmacotherapy, and psychosocial counselling, relapse prevention, aftercare, and brief interventions in a variety of settings.

It is noted that there are some limitations of the desktop report including:

- While every effort has been made to cover the spectrum of prevention activities in Tasmania, it is likely that some programs may have been missed.
- Prevention is not a precisely defined area. As it incorporates the social determinants of health, all community services sector programs could be defined as having critical preventative roles. To reflect the broadest definition of prevention would result in an unwieldy and unworkable document.
- It is not possible to gauge the number of clients impacted by a program delivery.
- The mapping information relies on pre-existing data/ mainly from websites and self-promoted information can contain bias.
- There is very little advertised indication of evidence-base for the programs. This does not preclude that the programs listed are without an evidenced base.
